HISTORICAL AND BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES

On the evening of February 5, 1911, lightning struck the dome of the Missouri State Capitol building at Jefferson City. Fed by dry roof beams and seventy-four years of accumulated state records, the flames turned the center of the building into a gigantic chimney. Despite the best efforts of several fire departments, the fire burned out of control. By morning only the outer walls remained.

This was the second capitol fire in Missouri's history. The first occurred in 1837 and destroyed most of the state's early records. Jefferson City's second State Capitol was completed in 1840 at a cost of $350,000. The building was enlarged in 1887 after an additional expenditure of $200,220 and remained unaltered until the fire.

Forced into temporary quarters in St. Peter's Church and the Supreme Court Building, legislators reacted quickly to the catastrophe. On March 24, 1911, the General Assembly enacted a law directing that a board of four commissioners be created to oversee planning and construction of a new capitol. The commissioners were to be selected by the Board of the Permanent Seat of Government from among "citizens and qualified voters of this state who shall be chosen in equal numbers from the two political parties which cast the greatest number of votes in the last general election" and styled the State Capitol Commission Board (SCCB). It was also recommended that at least one of the Commissioners "if obtainable, shall be a practical builder of high standing." The funding of this project was to be supported by a $3,500,000 bond issue approved by voters on August 1, 1911 by a vote of 144,644 for and 45,468 against. Other provisions required that the building be fireproof, be made of Missouri stone and that Missouri labor be used when possible.

The Board of the Permanent Seat of Government met in September 1911 and selected E.W. Stephens, prominent Columbia publisher; Alfred A. Speer, a banker from Chamois; Joseph C. A. Hiller of Glencoe, former State Labor Commissioner; and Theodore Lacaff of Nevada, MO, a building contractor and bank vice-president as Commissioners. Stephens and Hiller were Democrats, Speer and Lacaff Republicans.

Sworn in on October 6, 1911, the Commissioners conducted their first meeting, electing Stephens Chairman and Speer Vice-Chairman. A political dispute among the SCCB members over who should hold the office of secretary was resolved on November 3rd when Stephens chose J. Kelly Pool of Jefferson City. Architect Louis Spiering of St. Louis, hired as a consultant on November 1st, resigned due to illness and was replaced by L. Baylor Pendelton, also of St. Louis, on December 13th. Pendelton's official duties covered advising the Commissioners on all aspects of architectural planning.

In accordance with the 1911 law, the Commission then devised a competition program to select the design for the new capitol building and opened it to anyone interested. The design competition attracted the attention of the American Institute of Architects who opposed it as non-professional. Their major objections – lack of contestant anonymity, no guarantee that the best design would be chosen, and size of architects' commission – were resolved through a series of meetings and resulted in a revised program of competition. The rules were altered to include three prominent architects to assist the Commission in choosing the winner. Ten finalists were selected on October 1, 1912, and on October 21, the winner Tracy and Swartwout of New York was announced. The Board of the Permanent Seat of Government announced their approval of the SCCB's choice on November 6, 1912 and the contract was signed.

Except for the architects' competition, the most pressing concern of the SCCB in 1912 was the removal of the ruins of the old capitol. It was not until August that the ruins were deemed beyond repair and requests for bids submitted to two newspapers. This set of bids, opened on September 15, were regarded as too high by the Board and the project was re-advertised. On October 31, the second set of bids was opened and the contract awarded to the Joseph Pope Company of Jefferson City. The SCCB hoped that columns from the east portico of the old Capitol would be reassembled later as a memorial to the old building, but this was never accomplished.

The SCCB also planned to expand the capitol grounds and spent most of the year 1912 negotiating with Jefferson City landowners. Several of these property owners sold their buildings to the Board, which in turn used them as rental property until they were torn down.

The first construction contract was awarded on April 26, 1913, to the T. H. Johnson Company of Sedalia for the foundation. The Powerhouse and coal tunnel contracts were let to A. Anderson Company in August with the superstructure contract awarded to the Cleveland, Ohio, firm of John Gill and Sons Company on the 21st of November.

On May 6, 1913, the Board held the official groundbreaking ceremony. Dignitaries present included Governor Elliott Major and Secretary of State Cornelius Roach. At exactly 12:00 noon Commissioner Theodore Lacaff turned the first shovel.

Most of the first year's work consisted of planning and outlining the specifications for the building. The SCCB was inundated by correspondence requesting information on contracts and the bidding process. By January of 1914, a controversy over the stone to be used in the Capitol developed between the SCCB and John Gill and Sons Contractors. Although Missouri stone was specified in the law, the type and location of the stone was not indicated. The Gill Company planned to establish a new quarry in Ste. Genevieve while the Commission favored the use of existing quarries at Carthage, as rail service was already present. After a six-month-long controversy, the SCCB and John Gill and Sons Company came to an agreement on the stone. On December 31, 1914, the first stone was set on the exterior wall.

Other delays also slowed construction. Unusually cold and wet weather slowed drilling for the foundation. On September 25, 1913, a pier collapsed killing carpenters H. C. Hyde and Ira H. Greene. (The local newspaper account of this event conflicts with the SCCB's minutes. It confuses the pier numbers, attributes the cause to quicksand and misnames the men killed. See Jefferson City Daily Democrat Tribune, September 25-26, 1913, page 1, Columns 1 and 4). Serious conflicts ensued between the contractor and the workers, precipitating five strikes in 1914 over wages and layoffs.

In 1915, the Board's problems were compounded by a conflict with State Auditor John P. Gordon over payment for capitol furniture. The SCCB had ordered from the Vaughan, Stampfli and Oliver Company one letter file at a cost $32.50 and instructed the Auditor to pay for this file as a necessary expenditure. The Auditor contended the SCCB had no legal authority to spend state funds on furniture and he refused to honor the Board's voucher. In November of 1915, the SCCB filed a petition with the State Supreme Court for a writ of mandamus to force the Auditor to pay the bill. On December 8, after hearing arguments on both sides, the Court found in favor of the Auditor. The Court's unanimous decision was based on a strict interpretation of the 1911 law establishing the SCCB, which only authorized the Commission to supervise the construction of a capitol building. Although the Board requested the authority to furnish the Capitol in early 1916, it was not until April of 1917 that the General Assembly acted by allocating $300,000 to be used “in furnishing and otherwise equipping the new state capitol.” Included was a provision that none of the money appropriated be used to pay any experts to advise the SCCB on furnishing the Capitol.

Despite these difficulties, Capitol construction continued at a fairly rapid pace. The SCCB celebrated this progress with the laying of the cornerstone on June 24, 1915. Among the dignitaries were Governor Major and several Congressmen. The stone was installed by Masonic Grandmaster Tolman Cotton of St. Louis as 12,000 spectators looked on.

The Capitol was, however, far from complete. The relationship between the SCCB and the Gill Company, never good, began to deteriorate. The stone controversy apparently created ill feelings on both sides that never fully healed. The Commissioners interpreted any delay as “foot-dragging” by the Gill Company. Commissioner Lacaff, an experienced contractor, protested the use of what he termed sub-standard materials and complained vigorously against inferior workmanship. He voiced his objections many times to his fellow Board members, the contractors, and anyone else who would listen. Under intense pressure from the Governor, the Legislature, and the newspapers to complete the building, the Commissioners reacted strongly to charges that they were not keeping to their schedule.

The entry of the United States into World War I in April 1917 contributed to the delay. The Board’s correspondence from 1917-1918 contains numerous complaints about material delay and labor shortages. Furniture, carpeting, and at one point, the bronze doors for the ceremonial entrance were lost in transit.

On September 13, 1917, David Aronberg, the Gill Company’s representative, finally turned over the keys of the completed Capitol Building to the Commissioners. This ended a stormy relationship and enabled the Board to take a more active role in the day-to-day progress on the interior of the Capitol. Commissioner Lacaff operated as a supervisor, checking leaking roofs, defective plumbing, and careless painters.

Due to a shortage of funds, the Commission altered the original plans that called for an arcade over the railroad tracks and settled for a smaller terrace around the capitol itself. In April 1917, a special furniture appropriation provided that any funds remaining “may be used by said Board in the construction of the terrace of said capitol building.” In May of 1917, the Board let a contract to Pope Company for a concrete terrace at a cost of $133,000.

By the end of 1918, the Board’s work was largely completed. The new Capitol Building was finished and all the furniture in place. The Building was turned over to the Board of the Permanent Seat of Government in December 1918.

On February 5, 1919, nine years after the capitol burned, the Commissioners issued their final report. From February to May of 1919, the SCCB cleared up unpaid bills and advised the Board of the Permanent Seat of Government on the distribution of office space. On May 23, 1919, the SCCB directed Commissioner Lacaff to turn over all records to the State Auditor and adjourned “subject to call of the chairman.”

Although the building itself was complete, the capitol grounds and walkways remained unfinished. On April 20, 1921, the General Assembly allocated $60,000 “to be expended under the direction of the State Capitol Commission Board for the improvement of the capitol grounds and approaches to the capitol.” The SCCB reconvened on May 3, 1921, and began planning the drives and walkways as well as hiring staff. Louis Landmann, who had served as superintendent of construction in 1918, was chosen to supervise the ground crews and report any difficulties to Commissioner Lacaff.

The contract on the sidewalks was awarded to the Joseph Pope Company on May 21, 1921, and the asphalt contract for the drives was let to the Texaco Company on August 3. To assist in the planning process, the SCCB hired Egerton Swartwout, the Capitol’s architect, who laid out the walks and drives.

By mid-February of 1922, the Grounds were ready to be landscaped and planted. The contracts for this work were let to Stark Brothers of St. Louis, who sent their representative, C. C. Combs to supervise the planting. The H. J. Weber and Sons Company provided the trees and shrubs.

Superintendent Landmann, feeling that his part of the work was completed, tendered his resignation on April 4, 1922. He was succeeded by his assistant Louis Wolff who remained on the job until September 22, 1922. In this final phase, the SCCB came into conflict with the Board of the Permanent Seat of Government over the proper care of the Capitol. The SCCB objected to changes in the interior of the building, allocations of space and the failure of Capitol Police to stop speeders (who were under the jurisdiction of the Board of the Permanent Seat of Government) on the Capitol Grounds. As the building was no longer under their control, they merely voiced their disapproval.

By the fall of 1922, work on the Grounds was completed and the various contractors presented their accounts to the SCCB. All vouchers were promptly settled and on December 30, 1922, the CCB adjourned sine die.

Extent: 4 1/3 cubic ft.

Arrangement: Arranged alphabetically and chronologically.

Scope and Content

This series consists of letters to and from the Commission Board. The bulk of the correspondence deals with contractors and subcontractors seeking information on bids, and materials and plans to be used in the Capitol project. It also includes correspondence with architects Tracy & Swartwout and contractor John Gill and Sons Co.; requests by communities that their local stone be used in the construction of the capitol; letters from labor leaders on use of union labor; and replies from prominent citizens invited to the dedication ceremonies (President Woodrow Wilson, former governors Hadley and Major, and U.M.C. presidents Richard Jesse and A. Ross Hill). An interesting feature in the correspondence is the temporary loss of the bronze doors by the railroads during World War I. No index.

The Gideons' Bible from the 1915 time capsule was included in the 2015 time capsule, the only object to be reinterred.

The Missouri State Museum in the Capitol Building (part of the Department of Natural Resources) received the three-dimensional non-paper records from the time capsule. These items are now part of their collection.

1. The time capsule itself.
2. Hollow brass tube or cylinder with a removable cap on one end. Engraved at the center of the tube is "East Gate Lodge/#630- A.F. & A. M./Kansas City, Mo."
3. Two pieces of wood possibly used as shims.
