HISTORICAL AND BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES

In 1908, the Kansas City Board of Pardons and Paroles had a new idea. The existing workhouses in Kansas City were overcrowded and not producing the rehabilitation desired. The three people on the board, William Volker, Jacob Billikopf, and Kate E. Pierson, listened to Kansas City attorney Frank P. Walsh as he proposed a farm to which to send low-level criminals (mostly poor addicts and petty thieves). The residents were to be called simply “men,” not prisoners or inmates, and be allowed to wear regular clothes. The guards, aka foremen, were not armed. Instead, the resident men were required to work on a farm, in a quarry, on construction projects, or other labor-centered activities. They would learn new skills or improve existing ones, and learn good habits. No alcohol, cigarettes, or other drugs were allowed on the premises.

The City bought 132 acres near Leeds, MO, and the subsequent work farm, which opened in 1909, would be called Leeds Farm. Volker spent his own money on hiring the first superintendent. At first, men were the only residents at Leeds. Women were still confined to the City Workhouse in crowded, unpleasant conditions. Volker bought about 30 sewing machines for the women with his own money and then hired a professional to teach the women to sew clothing that the men would then wear. The women laundered the men's clothes as well.

Board member Billikopf says of the Farm's first year in operation, "The effect is wonderful. The men take a new interest in things. As an experiment in character building, the farm has certainly been a success." (The Kansas City Times) By 1911, Leeds Farm had a large dormitory for the men (they had earlier been living in a large farmhouse). A tuberculosis hospital opened on the grounds on Christmas Day, 1915.

"The City also created cemeteries (potters field) for victims of tuberculosis, prisoners, and the poor who could not pay for their own burial sites. The cemeteries were active from 1907 to 1965. The oldest cemetery, east of I-435, was closed in 1934. The second cemetery, located west of I-435, accepted burials from 1934-1964 and was racially segregated. (The Municipal Farm Sustainable Reuse Plan)

Over the years, the complex expanded to include not only the men's prison dormitory (completed in June 1911), but also a women's reformatory (built c1917); the Leeds Tuberculosis Sanitarium (built in 1911-1915); a farm; a dairy barn (completed c1917); a quarry; an administrative building (built 1911-1915) that housed a shoe shop, a bakery, tailor shop, janitor department, commissary, and kitchen; two large cemeteries (mentioned above) and more. By the time it closed as a work farm in the 1970s, the site had grown to 441 acres.

A new facility to be called the Municipal Correctional Institute (MCI) was built on the property from 1968-1971. It was dedicated on February 28, 1971. The new building complex would house both men and women and serve as a minimum-security facility for minor offenders. It included dormitories, a hospital with dentist, dining room, kitchen, commissary, activity room, classroom, barbershop and library. The administration building was named the Provyn Building after Cyril Provyn, a 22-year veteran superintendent of the Municipal Farm.

In the early 21st century, all the facilities on the property closed. Many buildings were razed and the land was returned to farmland and public community gardens. The cemeteries are largely unmarked and efforts are underway to get them recognized.

Documents (1909-1996)

PHOTOGRAPHS, 1909-1989

Arrangement: None

Scope and Content

These are 5x7 copy prints and 4x5 copy negatives made from the originals per a 2002 loan agreement with the Jackson County Municipal Correctional Institution. A majority of the images are from the 1909-1920 era, which would be the first decade of operation of the Municipal Farm. The collection also includes some photographs from the 1970s of the new Municipal Correctional Institution and from 1989 of the abandoned original Municipal Farm Administration Building. (No images from 1921-1969.)

These images have been digitized and are available as TIFs on the Z Drive.
