Historical and Biographical Notes

Francis Augustus Rodman (c1829-1881) was born as Franz Augustus Rodmann in Münster, Westphalia, Prussia on January 22 between 1823 and 1829. He studied in Detmold and Bonn, but was exiled from Prussia during the 1848-1849 German Revolutions. Rodman immigrated to the United States and settled first in Louisville, Kentucky. He married Mary Magdalene "Lydia" Eberwine in October 1852 in Vigo, Indiana. Their first child, Herman, was born in Kentucky in 1853.

By 1856, the Rodmans were living in Clayton County, Iowa. Francis Rodman was elected Iowa State Representative in 1856 and served on the New Counties Committee and Library Committee in the General Assembly. He served one term. In February 1860, he left Iowa for Pike's Peak, Colorado, where he set up a quartz mill and remained for roughly eight months.

Rodman and his family settled in St. Joseph, Missouri, sometime in 1861 or 1862. Rodman purchased a newspaper called Westliches Volksblatt and was also active in local politics. During the Civil War, he publicly stated his support of the Union and the abolition of slavery. He served briefly as the Quartermaster for the 43rd Regiment Infantry Volunteers. In May 1864, he announced his candidacy for Missouri Secretary of State on the Radical Republican ticket, to which he was duly elected by the voters in November of that year.

In June 1865, Secretary Rodman was the subject of controversy when he refused to let two individuals from St. Louis examine the election returns for Missouri's new constitution, the so-called Drake Constitution. Rodman countered that the votes had not yet been certified and that the existing constitution specified that only the Governor or General Assembly could request access. This ordeal would earn him the nickname "Count" because of the scrutiny to which he was subjected when counting the votes and because of the narrow results. Newspapers that leaned Democratic dogged Rodman throughout his years of service for this event.

Rodman ran for Secretary of State a second time in 1868 on a platform of suffrage rights for Black men. Rodman won the election against his opponent Bernard Poepping. Because of the 1865 Constitution, the new term would be two years instead of four. This term, too, was not without controversy and there were several cases that were heard in the Missouri Supreme Court against Rodman regarding vote certifications.

In July 1868, Rodman sued The Missouri Republican newspaper in St. Louis for libel. The paper had printed a story about him being drunk in public at a Jefferson City bar and, with friends, reenacting a Presbyterian church service and communion using beer and crackers, which Rodman denied. Just one year earlier, Rodman was angry with another newspaper for printing a slanderous story against him. That time it was the Westliche Post, also in St. Louis.

He did have his supporters. In February 1869, Rep. C.C. Byrne introduced a bill to re-name Callaway County Rodman County. That same month, citizens of Johnson, Cass and Jackson Counties petitioned the General Assembly to form a new county, also to be called Rodman. Both proposals died in committee. Locally, Rodman helped manage his own private garden, called the Rodman Conservatory, which included hundreds of flowering plants and cacti; newspapers praised the garden.

Rodman chose not to run in the 1870 election. His Chief Clerk, Eugene F. Weigel, became Missouri's next Secretary of State. Bankrupt and maligned by the papers, Rodman moved his family to Chicago in 1873. There, he worked as a custom house inspector, a writer/journalist for a German newspaper and in various clerk positions. He still gave political speeches, but now for other candidates.

Missouri newspapers jokingly printed in 1873 that Rodman was appointed Minister to Siam, and they were more than happy to see him go. The joke was repeated in 1874 after Rodman had moved to Chicago. The German-language paper there, the Illinois Staatszeitung, wished him “the stomach of an ostrich” (an iron stomach) should he travel to Bangkok. In reply, Rodman traveled to the Radical Republican State Convention dressed as a decoy or scarecrow and pretended to disappear. The paper saluted his humor.

Francis Rodman died July 1, 1881, at his home in Chicago from a stroke.
