Historical and Biographical Notes

President Franklin Delano Roosevelt's expansive, ambitious 1933 New Deal program included a temporary relief program called the Civilian Conservation Corps, or CCC. The Corps' mission was two-fold: to provide jobs for young men (and some women) who needed work and to improve or create new natural areas in all states.

There were at least 136 CCC camps in Missouri. They were in operation until Congress voted to stop the program in 1942 in favor of the war effort. (However, some remained open after 1942 and were converted for other government purposes.) The majority of the work done by CCC enrollees was toward infrastructure improvement, natural areas improvement. This included the construction of bridges, roads, waterways, buildings, and more. The natural areas were treated to cabins, easier access for the public through channelized water, roads, and trails, and parks.

This particular collection contains copies of images taken at five CCC campsites in Missouri: Palmyra, New Madrid, Mt. Vernon, Kahoka and Centaur.

Series

The records are organized into the following series:

Photographs, 1935-1942
Official Annuals, 1937

Photographs, 1935-1942

Extent: 163 Photographs; 0.17 cubic feet.

Arrangement: by geographic location.

Scope and Content

This is a series of copies of images taken by three men who were stationed in and around four Civilian Conservation Corps camps in Missouri: Palmyra, Mt. Vernon, Kahoka and New Madrid. Images show camp life, work and the camp buildings. Most photos were contributed by CCC men Fred R. Jacoby, Cecil Westmorland and Archie W. Durham. Some of the originals of the Kahoka Camp are kept in the Clark County Museum.

The oversized image is an original photograph of the CCC Camp near Centaur, MO in St. Louis County.

All photos have been scanned as 300dpi or 400dpi .tifs. Images are available in-house.
