HISTORICAL AND BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES

Elliot Woolfolk Major was born on October 24, 1864 in Edgewood, Lincoln County, Missouri to James Reed Major and Sarah Ann Taylor Woolfolk. He attended public schools in Pike County and the Watson Seminary in Ashley. He married Elizabeth Terrill Myers in Bowling Green, Missouri on June 14, 1887 and the couple raised three children.

Major began work as a teacher in 1884 but left to study law with James Beauchamp Clark in Bowling Green. He was admitted to the Missouri Bar in 1885. Major served as law clerk for Clark in the Missouri legislature in 1889 and was briefly a partner in the Clark law firm. He established a reputation as a trial lawyer and became interested in politics. Major was elected in 1896 to the Missouri Senate from the 11th District and served through 1899 when he became editor of the Revised Statutes of Missouri.
In 1908, Major was elected attorney general. He argued more than a thousand cases before the Missouri Supreme Court and took 52 cases to the United States Supreme Court. One successful decision upheld Missouri’s maximum railroad freight-rate laws. Of particular importance, the U. S. Supreme Court unanimously upheld Missouri’s law in the state suit against Standard Oil Company.

Major defeated John C. McKinley in the 1912 gubernatorial election and was sworn in as Missouri’s 33rd governor on January 13, 1913. Major personally read his biennial messages to the General Assembly, the first governor to do so. During his administration, the Missouri legislature ratified the 17th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution in 1913. The first senator directly elected to the U. S. Senate by Missourians was William Joel Stone in 1914. Use of the referendum as a legislative process was tested in 1914 when four measures were voted on by the general public (they all failed).

A primary accomplishment of the Major administration included the creation in 1913 of the Public Service Commission in order to regulate rates charged by the utility companies. Also during the Major administration, the Pardon and Parole Board was established, and Missouri’s first comprehensive securities act was passed to supervise corporations operating in the state. Missouri road improvement interested Major and in 1913 and 1914 (Good Road Days) he worked alongside volunteers to construct nearly 400 miles of roads; and also, the state highway department was established. On March 22, 1913, the governor approved the adoption of a state flag designed by Marie Watkins Oliver of Cape Girardeau. Designated for the first Monday in October, Missouri Day was approved on March 22, 1915. The governor refused to raise taxes throughout his term and combined with overspending, the state was $2.5 million in debt when the governor’s term expired.

When his term ended in 1917, Major opened a law office in St. Louis, continuing his legal career until he retired in 1945. He remained active in civic affairs and maintained memberships in the American, Missouri, and St. Louis Bar Associations along with the Odd Fellows, the Elks, and the Masonic Lodge. Governor Major died on July 9, 1949 in Eureka, St. Louis County and is interred in City Cemetery in Bowling Green, Missouri.
