Community Engagement

The library district’s community is integral to any decision made concerning library operations. Libraries and communities have an interdependent relationship. Local communities provide libraries with funding, collaboration opportunities and advocates. A library contributes to the economic health of the community, preserves the memories of the community, and provides a place where people can explore, access resources, share ideas, and be transformed. The library is also a valued asset in addressing community-wide problems.

Standards

1. The library board and staff search for opportunities to cooperate with other community organizations including all types of libraries, governmental agencies, nonprofit organizations, and the private sector, in order to embed themselves in the community and ensure healthy communities that understand the value of libraries.

2. The library district uses a variety of means to reach out and cooperate with the community in order to stay knowledgeable about its needs. In addition, opportunities for community involvement within the library are made available to volunteers. Cooperation may include sharing of resources, staff expertise, training opportunities, or other joint activities. Staff representation in other community organizations is also essential.

3. The library has a Friends group and/or a Foundation that assists the library in fundraising, advocacy and reaching out to the community. Resources from these organizations do not replace the operating budget.
